Looking through the book of Nehemiah

If you've been a believer for any time at all, you have encountered spiritual drift to some degree. We start out here and before we know it, we end up there. We have powerful experiences with God, only to find that over time, the power of that encounter begins to fade in our memory.

God might use a message or a scripture or a person or even a trial to stir the embers of our hearts and our love for Jesus burns brightly again, only to see that little by little that fire begins to cool.

Most believers don't consciously say, "I think I'm gonna leave my first love" – we drift away from it a little bit at a time often without knowing it. We live in a world, and we live with a heart, where relentless currents are always pushing or pulling us away from God. Spiritual drift isn't something we overcome once and for all – even though we are anchored in Christ, we need to be awake and alert and occasionally reset our position.

Spiritual drift is something we will have to face – and fight – for as long as we live on this earth.

Four principles to help us fight against spiritual drift in our lives:

It takes more than just commitment alone – we need Jesus

We need constant and consistent engagement with God's word

We need to be anchored to God through prayer

We need the encouragement and support of each other
