Kids Camp

Last weekend, 17 Kids and leaders from Maryborough & Castlemaine travelled down to Phillip Island for an awesome Kids Camp. We were taught by a puppet, had our choice of many many activities, and made heaps of friends from all over Victoria! We learnt about how to grow in, and serve Jesus, using the gifts he has given us. It was a valuable weekend for both the kids and the leaders, and we can't wait to go back next year!

REVIEWED BY ANTHONY CASTLE

Dad Said is written by Salvation Army officer Major Russell Anderson, a first-time book author based in Geelong.

A proud father and grandfather, Russell has produced the story in collaboration with his daughter Christine, who illustrated the book. It was during a time of play that the idea for the children's book series Dad Said came about.

The story's premise is of a father who sets out to bake a cake with the kids for the mother's birthday. Told from the perspective of one of the daughters, the attempt to bake a cake goes horribly wrong as the father goes about gathering the ingredients and the children attempt to follow the recipe. Russell's narrative utilises an effective rhyming scheme, building to a double-page spread at the book's climax, its humour revolving around the hapless dad motif. Christine's pastel illustrations are fun and detailed, with a soft approach to linework (even a little reminiscent of the style seen in 60s Hannah-Barbera animations).

Another feature of the illustration is the presence of a mischievous possum that hides amidst the pages, providing an extra layer of fun for young readers looking to spot the creature while reading the book.

Dad Said is published by Little Steps and will particularly work for preschool-aged readers. This initial release is subtitled Book 1, implying more tales may come featuring this father and family.

Dad Said is a simple story, but that will help it connect with kids learning about the mistakes we can make and the memories we make that matter so much more.
